CENTRAL CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN RABBIS, REFORM, MEETS IN TORONTO

A resolution condemning U.S. involvement in Vietnam and urging the admission of Communist China to the United Nations was approved by the Central Conference of American Rabbis, meeting at the Royal York Hotel, in Toronto, says the Toronto Globe and Mail. Approval of the resolution, which also calls for free elections in South Vietnam by September 15, came after a hectic 90-minute debate. The vote was 128 to 55 in favor of a report by Rabbi Arthur Lelyveld, of Cleveland, Ohio, that criticized the United States.

Rabbi Lelyveld said the CCAR recoils in moral horror at obliteration bombings, napalm raids, and the destruction of crops, all of which harm innocent people.

Several rabbis found the report too critical of the administration of President Lyndon Johnson. One observer said most of those opposed to the tougher line toward U. S. military involvement were chaplains or rabbis from fundamentalist areas of the United States. Many rabbis have been feeling the pressure of congregations who condemn criticism of the U.S. war effort.

The rabbis approved an amendment praising U. S. peace overtures and pressed for a continued U. S. effort in finding a peaceful settlement to the war.

The CCAR represents 670 Reform congregations in the United States and Canada.

The 77th annual meeting of the Central Conference asked both the American and Canadian Governments "actively to support" the seating of Communist China in the United Nations. They said such a move would ease international tensions, reports Irving Spiegel, in the New York Times. The delegates unanimously approved the Red China admission clause. But it was the Vietnamese issue that held their intense attention in an atmosphere that reflected a sharp cleavage of opinion.

Presiding at the meeting was Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein, president of the organization, an outspoken critic of Washington's policy on the Vietnam war. Opponents of the statement wanted a moderate formulation of certain sections, contending that the language unfairly questioned the motives of the Administration.

One portion that remained intact asserted:

"Leaders in Government circles and close to our Administration offer assurances there will be no economic recession in 1966-67, but hedge those assurances with the word 'unless the war in Vietnam ends'. We worry about the forces, conscious and unconscious, that reinforce our persistence in that unhappy struggle."

Included in this section was one that mentioned the "gratification of American military leaders" that Vietnam provides a testing ground for new weapons and for the present material of the American military establishment.

Opposing these sections, Rabbi Joshua Haberman, of Trenton, N.J., asserted that they insinuated that the Government in prosecution of the war in Vietnam "is guided by fear of an economic recession." Rabbi Haberman also objected to the contention that the war was being utilized as a testing for new weapons.

In an interview by the New York Times Rabbi Lelyveld said that this section "does not question the Administration or any individual," adding that it specifically credits "all those with motives of patriotism."

Rabbi Lelyveld's statement referred to a part of the controversial section that asserted that "most of those who support the war in Vietnam do so out of motivations blended of patriotism and justice."

The section also said:

"But we view with dismay the subtle ways in which American generosity of spirit and dedication to liberty may be exploited."

Opponents of the statement succeeded in winning approval for an amendment that uphold the Johnson Administration's "constant efforts to seek a peaceful settlement."

In another action, the delegates expressed "anguished concern" over the plight of Soviet Jews. The delegates expressed hope that Soviet authorities would "permit Jewish emigration and would remove "those restrictions which make any meaningful Jewish religious and cultural life presently impossible in the Soviet Union."

Reform Jewish religious leaders concede that a reappraisal of traditional Jewish thinking is needed to meet the challenge of a secular, scientific-oriented society.

This consensus was set forth in discussions and interviews with the leaders of American and Canadian Reform Judaism at the annual meeting of the Central Conference of American Rabbis.

In effect, the rabbis conclude that although Jews have historically always accepted God as the basis for their faith, the contemporary emphasis on science and technology has brought this traditional belief into question. It is not enough, they say, "for the concept of God to remain implicit in Jewish religious teaching — God must be made explicit to the modern Jew."

Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein, of Chicago, who was re-elected president, said that the rabbinic concept of God was less vulnerable to criticism leveled at the new Protestant theologians of the "God is dead" concept "because we have kept God undefined or vaguely defined."

The Torah and the Talmud, he continued, "take for granted the existence of God and take His presence as the very ground for all their ethical and moral prescriptions for the conduct of man," says the New York Times. The Torah embraces the first five Books of Moses. The Talmud is the repository of the ethical, religious, and legal teachings that provide everyday guidances.

Rabbi Weinstein conceded that a reappraisal and rethinking of Judaism was needed in order to cope with the mood of contemporary theology. He said this reappraisal would involve the "shifting of God from metaphysics to politics."

Such a reappraisal, he said, would mean that a belief in God "motivates man in making a decision on all matters pertaining to the improvement of the human being — in such areas as civil rights, the creation of peace and order."

The core of ethical Judaism, Rabbi Weinstein declared, received its "highest affirmation from the Prophets with their concepts of social justice — this is the burden of these God-intoxicated men."

Rabbinic delegates reacted warmly to Rabbi Weinstein's opinion. Rabbi Sidney L. Regner, executive vice-president of the group, believed that it touched "the very heart of Judaism's modern day problem — its need to come to grips with the challenges which come from contemporary thought."

Rabbi Weinstein criticized religious groups for not getting beyond the statement phase in their work for peace, says the Toronto Globe and Mail.

"We have not brought the deeply felt discontent and resentment with this war to the sticking point so that men running for elective office are aware of it," he told the convention.

"Hundreds of good people, some of them respected and influential businessmen and professional men, have taken me aside to whisper confidentially that they believe our Government to be embarked on a reckless and fruitless adventure in Vietnam, but they cannot publicly confess this for fear of endangering their position and the economic welfare of their clients."

Rabbi Weinstein said statements made by religious leaders calling for an end to bombing are of limited value. "The effective reports on door-to-door peace work still comes from the passionate but powerless Quakers, Mennonites, United Brethren, Jehovah's Witnesses and the secular peace organizations."

Speaking on theological matters, Rabbi Weinstein said "It is the friends of religion and not its enemies who are saying that God is dead.

"They are using this drastic technique to make us think about what we mean when we use the term God. They are trying to save the term from being a lazy man's expletive, from being a cover-up for a curse or a stutter.

"God knows that it is high-time that someone blistered the knuckles of those who hold on to heavenly coat-tails for a free ride to a honky-tonk heaven."

He criticized Jews for hiding in suburban ghettoes and inside their houses of worship. "In this effort to make religion relevant in the secular city, our Protestant and Catholic colleagues have far outstripped us.

"They have preserved the core city institutions and have developed new forms of ministry to the people who have remained in the central city."

A 21-year-old Harvard graduate criticised Reform rabbis for failing to reach today's Jewish university students. Marc Saperstein, son of a Long Island rabbi, charged that many students are appalled by aspects of Jewish life which "reeks of the tawdry, the trite, and the mundane."

"The lavish vulgarity, the gala vacuousness of most organizational activities, the crass materialism of modern fund-raising tactics, all of these the student sees, and they repel him," he maintained. To overcome this, he urged the entire Jewish community to expend a major effort in establishing chairs of Judaism studies at universities.

"If college youth, if the young Jewish intellectuals are as important to you as you say they are, it is time to do something meaningful and far-sighted about them," he said.

Rabbi Jack Stern, of Scarsdale, N.Y., suggested that money lav-

KING FAISAL, ABSOLUTE ARAB MONARCH, EXTOLLS FREE ENTERPRISE SYSTEM AT BANKER'S LUNCHEON

An absolute monarch held a seminar and praised the free enterprise system before a group of scholars and men of affairs gathered at the tree-shaded Pocantico Hills estate of the Rockefeller family. The unusual lecturer was King Faisal, of Saudi Arabia, who spent a relaxed three hours at Tarrytown, N. Y., writes Henry Raymont, of the New York Times, as the luncheon guest of David Rockefeller, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank, in New York.

Attending the private gathering were about forty bankers, oil executives, and university professors, interested in the Arab world. Their host would not disclose their names.

Conspicuously absent from the luncheon was Governor Rockefeller, who had cancelled an appointment with the King after the King said in Washington that he considered Jews who supported Israel to be enemies of the Arab world. Mr. Rockefeller acted after Mayor Lindsay called off a dinner in honor of the King.

David Rockefeller said his brother could not come because of a previous commitment. Governor Rockefeller was among many political officials who spent the afternoon in New York City reviewing the annual Puerto Rican parade.

The bank president, who has visited Saudi Arabia three times, declined to comment about the controversy stirred by King Faisal's remarks and the subsequent social snubs by his brother and Mayor Lindsay. However, he said the King's three-hour visit "could not have been more friendly, open, and gracious."

One of the guests disclosed later that after the luncheon, the sixty-two-year-old monarch gave an informal talk on his desert kingdom's oil-rich economy. The King was represented as having emphasized the success of free enterprise methods in modernizing Saudi Arabia and his hope that other countries in the region would follow the same economic philosophy.

King Faisal was reported by an aide to have thoroughly enjoyed the twenty-mile drive from the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, where he occupied a seven-room suite, to the Rockefeller estate, a sprawling extension of woodland and groomed green lawns. The skies were a gray overcast as the King's motorcade sped along the Thomas E. Dewey Thruway, says the New York Times, and thin banks of mist clung to the rolling landscape.

The motorcade reached Tarrytown at 12:30 p.m. and was ushered in by two square-shouldered guards who manned the heavy iron-grilled gates at the main driveway that leads to the residential section of the estate, on which each of the five Rockefeller brothers occupies a house. The luncheon was held in the "playhouse," a Norman-style structure with heavy wooden beams.

Most of the guests arrived ahead of the King's party, but five cars were admitted after their identity was checked against a five-page list. Newspaper reporters and photographers were not allowed on the estate because, Mrs. David Rockefeller explained, it was a "strictly private party." The King had agreed to leave behind the six Arabian reporters who accompany him on his state visit.

Whether because of the wishes of the Rockefeller family, the discretion or indifference of neighbors, or the normal stillness of a summer Sunday in the suburbs, the King's arrival and departure went almost unnoticed.

The clouds had vanished when the guests began to leave at 3:30 and the sun filtered through a thin haze as the royal motorcade drove back to the city.

Meantime Mayor Lindsay declared that politics had played no part in his decision to cancel the city's honors for the visiting King.

"It was a very difficult decision over a very serious matter, because it was a very serious statement by the King," Mr. Lindsay said during an interview on WABC-TV's "Page One" program.

The King had been asked during a news conference in Washington why Saudi Arabia had joined the Arab blockade against American concerns trading with Israel. He replied: "Unfortunately, Jews support Israel and we consider those who provide assistance to our enemies as our own enemies."

Ambassador Anas Yassin, one of the King's aides, emphasized subsequently that political Zionism, and not Judaism as a religion, had been the monarch's target, reports the New York Times. The Mayor confirmed that Secretary of State Dean Rusk had been in contact with him and that he had also sought a clarification from the King's aides. He said, however, "It is best if I make no comment."

Sen[illegible]ts Rich, Rare, Ancient Books In Library Gift

A library of 6,000 volumes covering Jewish learning and thought, including rare and ancient items, was presented to the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York, to help replace seventy thousand books destroyed by a fire this spring, says Irving Spiegel, of the New York Times.

The gift came from the Brooklyn Jewish Center, an influential Conservative congregation of 667 Eastern Parkway. During the almost fifty years of its existence, the congregation has had a special book fund. Its librarian, the late Dr. Elias Rabinowitz, a graduate of the Seminary, and a noted Jewish scholar, used the fund to purchase books throughout the world.

The gift was accepted by Dr. Louis Finkelstein, the Seminary's chancellor. It was presented by Rabbi Benjamin Z. Kreitman and Rabbi Israel H. Levinthal, religious leaders of the Brooklyn Jewish Center, and its president, Emanuel Cohen.

Seminary officials said that they hoped most of the titles destroyed in the fire on April 18 would be replaced, and the library restored to full use in the fall. But they felt it would be more difficult to assemble adequate numbers of the various texts.

The officials stress the importance of acquiring, either by purchase or gift, entire libraries from individuals or smaller institutions. To date the Seminary has received more than $300,000 in gifts toward such purchases.

This important new gift was hailed as a "large and rich collection" by Dr. Finkelstein. The collection includes writings in Hebrew, Yiddish, German, and English, and the ancient Aramaic.

The collection includes rare editions of commentaries of Abravanel, 15th-century scholar, one on the Passover Haggadah, which was published in 1545 in Venice and tells the story of the liberation of the ancient Israelites from Egyptian bondage. The other is a 17th-century Bible with commentary by Abravanel.

There are also four folio volumes of a rabbinical Bible, printed

Israeli Mercy Mission For Child Of Nazi Victims Includes Free Trip By Greek Line

A fourteen year old Israeli girl with only one leg arrived in New York for an operation to fit her with an artificial limb after four unsuccessful attempts in Israel. The girl, Miss Bracha Lauter, of 3 Galil Street, Kiryat Bialik, Israel, will be treated at the Joint Diseases Hospital in New York City by Dr. Bernard Klieger.

Arriving aboard the Greek Line's Olympia which sailed from Haifa, Miss Lauter was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Shoshana Lauter, survivor of Nazi concentration camps in World War II. Bracha's father, Elimelech, is also a concentration camp survivor, and the family is partly on welfare.

Because her parents would not have been able to pay for her trip to New York, philanthropic individuals in Israel arranged the mercy mission, and free transportation was provided by the Greek Line.

What Fun! Why Not Here?

The prices came from another day and age. The food came from all the lands that have contributed to the collection of nationalities on New York's Upper West Side, says the New York Times.

And the appetites (550 of them) came from all directions the other evening to Public School 9 at 84th Street and Columbus Avenue.

It was the second annual Old Fashioned Pot Luck Supper sponsored by the Parents Association for the school staff, its seven hundred pupils (ranging from the Operation Headstart program through the fifth grade), their families and friends.

The à la carte entrees included Mexican tamalitas (chicken-stuffed tamales in dried corn husks) for fifteen cents; Italian vitello tonnato (cold veal with tuna sauce) for forty cents; British shepherd's pie (a ground beef mixture topped with mashed potatoes) for thirty cents; and Italian lasagna for twenty-five cents.

A fixed price of $2 entitled a guest to tastes and second helpings of more than twenty main dishes ranging from tempura (Japanese batter-fried shrimp to filets de poisson chablis (fish fillets in wine sauce); a homemade dessert, and a beverage.

Invitations to attend and contribute main dishes, salads, vegetables, and desserts were written in Spanish and English. Mrs. Joel Weiser and Mrs. Chester Borrock, co-chairmen of the event, reported that more than one hundred dishes were carried to the school lunchroom by mothers born in Cuba, China, Japan, Germany, Italy, Israel, England, Pakistan, Mexico, and the Dominican Republic.

"It spreads the experience of the children," said Mrs. Rose Gevirtz, acting principal. "It's something special — a night out and a chance to try different foods."

However, a special table was set up to meet the not-so-adventurous appetites of many children. Frankfurters, baked beans, spaghetti, and fried chicken were the big sellers there.

"I want a drumstick," was the cry from a four-year-old clad in white Levis and a striped T shirt, while nearby a six-year-old in shirt, tie and madras jacket licked the catsup on his hotdog.

Tyco, nine years old, Tomi, seven, and Toby, four, the children of Mrs. Shina Obayashi, who was helping behind the children's table, insisted on buying their mother's chirashi zushi (a cold Japanese rice and vegetable dish garnished with seaweed and chopped egg).

Another mother said, "I bought back the rice and beans I made, I like it."

More than fifty mothers worked either in the stainless steel kitchen or behind the serving tables in the blue-tiled lunchroom.

The dinner netted $450 for the Parents Association. The money will be used for financing activities such as the school bulletin and speakers for meetings, and for sponsoring community organizations.

MONTREAL APPROACHING MARRIAGES

Mr. and Mrs. Ezekiel Schouela, 3137 Cedar Avenue, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Loris Schouela, to Alfred Weigensberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Leslie Weigensberg, 5229 Trans Island Avenue, to take place on Thursday, July 28, at six o'clock, at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue.

CENTRAL CONFERENCE

ished on expensive Bar Mitzvahs be spent instead on better university facilities and new Jewish departments for Jewish students.

American Reform Judaism has stepped up its activity in the last year to "open the doors of the synagogue for the unchurched and the unsynagogued," with particular emphasis on the non-Jew who may seek to embrace Judaism as his faith, says the New York Times. Rabbi Abraham Shusterman of Baltimore, chairman of the Committee on the Unaffiliated of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, emphasized that Reform Judaism was not seeking converts among active members of other faiths but rather was "trying to bring the message and insights of Judaism to the unaffiliated Gentile."

Rabbi Shusterman, in an interview and also in his report, declared that one of the major reasons for the intensified activity was to cope with the "rising tide of assimilation resulting from marriages of Jews and non-Jews."

He cited the need for "increasing the numbers and vitality of Judaism by interesting unaffiliated non-Jews in the Jewish faith." Leaders of the group also emphasized that this activity should not be interpreted as an active proselytizing campaign, as is associated with Christian missionary movements.

While exact figures have not been available concerning mixed marriages, Jewish religious and secular leaders on frequent occasions have expressed sharp concern that Judaism has lost its meaning for Jewish college youths.

The latest edition of the American Jewish Yearbook estimates that there are 5.6 million Jews in the United States, with 25-30 per cent affiliated with Orthodoxy; 40 per cent divided between the Conservative and Reform branches; and the rest uncommitted.

"Judaism," said Rabbi Shusterman, who is the leader of Bar Sinai Congregation, "is a monotheistic faith whose emphasis on one God implies one mankind. In a world of ethical decline, we believe this message is important and we want to share it with our fellow men."

His report to 500 rabbis attending the meeting disclosed that a number of programs and seminars were about to be introduced in various Reform Jewish institutions throughout the country, says the New York Times. He said that newspaper advertisements, announcing instruction and learning about Judaism, converting or marrying into the Jewish faith have been printed in Philadelphia and Baltimore.

The programs, he said, have been given an impetus by the lay leaders of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the body of 670 Reform Congregations in the Western Hemisphere.

The increased activity includes the publication, in the near future, of three pamphlets dealing with every phase of Judaism, including a special appeal that will be made to the "non-Jew who seeks a faith and may find it in our midst."

The pamphlets, Rabbi Shusterman said, will particularly be made available at Reform Congregations throughout the country "to interpret for laymen of our congregations the philosophy of our mission."

He stressed that non-Jews seeking conversion who desire the religious practices of Orthodoxy and Conservatism will be referred to those branches of Judaism.

The traditional standards for conversion, as prescribed by both Orthodox and Conservative Judaism, require that the prospective convert be forewarned as to the implications and the gravity of this step. The prospective convert goes through a period of intensive study of Judaism and its comparison with other faiths. The instruction involves the circumcision ritual.

Reform Judaism also requires an intensive period of study for conversion but does not demand circumcision for adult converts.

In effect, Reform Judaism has been engaged in conversion for the last ten years, especially in New York where the New York Federation of Reform Synagogues conducts classes at the headquarters of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

Rabbi Daniel L. Davis, director of the Federation, estimated that in the last ten years an average of 3,000 non-Jews annually had embraced Judaism by affiliating with its three branches, says the New York Times. However, he said exact figures could not be obtained because there was no central registry.

Another rare manuscript is a commentary on the Bible written by Rabbi Limanni, and published in 1664. This particular commentary includes replies to Christian comment on certain portions in the Bible, both in Hebrew and Latin.

The Passover Haggadah, published in 1545, shows deletions "made by censors" who objected to the mention of royalty as being oppressors of the Jews. The Bible was published in Italy at a time when the nation was divided into principalities, says the New York Times. Another passage deleted referred to the rebellion of the ancient Israelites against Pharaoh.

MARRIAGES

SKRZYDLO - REVZEN

The marriage of Miss Helen Revzen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Revzen, 143 Combe Avenue, to Sheldon Skrzydlo, son of Samuel Skrzydlo, 34 Carscadden Drive, and the late Mrs. Dora Skrzydlo, was solemnized on June 26, at half-past five o'clock, at Bnai Israel Beth David Synagogue, by Rabbi Albert Pappenheim, assisted by Cantor David Greengarten. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white, Empire-styled gown of lace over organza. It was designed with a round neckline; and straight skirt; and with its own coat, which shaped to a long train. Her tulle, illusion veil was shoulder-length and placed by a headpiece of pearls; and she carried a bouquet of white orchids, on a Bible. Miss Lee Papier was maid of honour. She wore a gown, with a white chiffon bodice; and a mauve skirt; and had a matching veil; and a cascade bouquet of mauve and white carnations. Misses Sharon Tanzer, of Montreal, Quebec; and Rochelle Woloshin, of Hamilton, Ontario, cousins of the bride; Mindy Katz, and Barbara Rutman; and Mesdames Phillip Smith and F. Stein, were bridesmaids. They wore Empire-styled, chiffon gowns; with purple bodices; with v-shaped necklines; and white chiffon skirts; and had flowers entwined as head-dresses; and they carried cascade bouquets of mauve and white carnations. Morissa Revzen, sister of the bride; Lorraine Skrzydlo, sister of the groom; and Lisa Millian, were junior bridesmaids. They wore Empire-styled, white eyelet-embroidered cotton gowns, over purple satin; and matching head-bands. Lisa Millian carried a basket of rose petals; and Morissa Revzen and Lorraine Skrzydlo carried cascade bouquets of carnations. Ralph Skrzydlo, brother of the groom, was best man. Barry Revzen, brother of the groom; Nathan Goldberg, of Brooklyn, New York and Robert Skrzydlo, cousins of the groom; Stanley Arbus, Barry Train, Howard Sparaga, Barry Walton and Gary Pollack, were ushers. Allan Tanzer, of Montreal, Quebec, cousin of the bride, was ring-bearer. Allan wore a tuxedo jacket. Benjamin Revzen, 3172 Van Horne Avenue, Montreal, Quebec, grandfather of the bride, asked the blessing. Ralph Skrzydlo, brother of the groom, was master of ceremonies. Michael Ross, 187 Goddard Avenue, was toastmaster. The wedding flowers were white and mauve carnations, and roses. An orchestra played; and three hundred guests were received. Mrs. Louis Revzen, mother of the bride, wore a gown of beaded lace, over mauve satin; and a mauve orchid wristlet. Mrs. Benjamin Revzen, grandmother of the bride, wore a beaded, Tea-rose-shaded crepe gown; and a mauve orchid corsage. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon Skrzydlo spent their wedding trip in Montego Bay, Jamaica; the bride travelling in a two-piece, white linen suit; with a matching linen hat; and a white orchid corsage. They have taken up new residence at 143 Combe Avenue. Out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Revzen, 3172 Van Horne Avenue, Montreal, Quebec, grandparents of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. M. Schwartz, of Neptune Colony, New Jersey; Mr. and Mrs. J. Goldberg, of Brooklyn, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tanzer and Howard Tanzer, Murray Tanzer, Miss Sharron Tanzer, Marlene and Alan, of Montreal, Quebec; Mr. and Mrs. Max Goldstein, of Montreal, Quebec; also Mr. and Mrs. Issie Woloshin and Larry Woloshin and Miss Rochelle Woloshin, of Hamilton, Ontario; Mrs. Sarah Benjamin, of Canton, Ohio; and Mrs. David Drobnis, of Boston, Massachusetts, all uncles and aunts of the bride; Avrom Corson and Mrs. Dora Polak, of Newark, New Jersey; Mr. and Mrs. I. Gibbs, of Norwalk, Connecticut; Mr. and Mrs. George Bitterman and Miss Sheila Bitterman, of Miami Beach, Florida; Mrs. Jack Feiner, Nathan Goldberg, Mr. and Mrs. S. Szwartbard and Mr. and Mrs. S. Lipman, all of Brooklyn, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Max Greenbaum, of Montreal, Quebec; Mr. and Mrs. I. Zaritsky, of Ste. Sophie, Quebec; Dr. and Mrs. Stanley Benjamin, and Gerald and Sheldon; and Sanford Merkin, all of Canton, Ohio, all cousins of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. A. Freedman, Mr. and Mrs. G. King Faisal Seeks Aid In Washington

The London Times says: King Faisal of Saudi Arabia set out for Madrid, and Washington on a journey which would keep him out of the Middle East for a fortnight. Preserving the diplomatic courtesies, he sent a good-will message to President Nasser as he flew over Egypt, but he leaves the Arab world in a mood of frenzied suspicion and recrimination, unmatched for some time, even in this volatile part of the globe.

There may be many explanations for this, but one of them is that outside powers have begun to play again on the area's chronic susceptibility to foreign pressure. The prime mover has been the Soviet Union, which has attached the new Syrian regime firmly to its bandwagon and seems to have inspired efforts to form a front of so-called progressive Arab countries.

King Faisal, though he may admit a theoretical difference, has difficulty in drawing a practical distinction between the policies of some of these regimes and those of communism, and he has taken a theological stand against atheist systems in general. Indeed, his advocacy of Islamic solidarity may have brought out the new Soviet initiative.

In this context, he can presumably expect theoretical nourishment from General Franco and theological support from the Pope, with whom he is at present trying to arrange a meeting. How much practical help he will ask — or get — from President Johnson, who is so heavily preoccupied in Vietnam, is not certain, but he is said to have two specific points to make. In the first place, he is likely to complain about American arms deliveries to Israel which have been an embarrassment to him as a known friend of the United States and a recipient himself of American arms.

More subtly, he would like to persuade President Johnson that the United States is adopting too permissive an attitude towards President Nasser's foreign adventures and should, especially in the light of Soviet moves, be tougher. This is not to say that he would like supplies of wheat cut off, but rather that he might like the sanction which it implies applied more vigorously.

His anxiety to make certain of the American position can only have been increased by Britain's impending withdrawal from South Arabia and suggestions that the United States might be, to some extent, "farming out" its responsibilities in the Middle East because of overriding commitments elsewhere.

The Cairo and Damascus press have pounced upon a report from the New York Times's correspondent in Israel which has been interpreted as meaning that the United States is now relying on the strength of its allies in certain areas, including the Middle East, where it cannot intervene directly itself. Israel is seen to be the main beneficiary, although Al Ahram, the Egyptian newspaper, has commented that direct intervention by the United States would not be ruled out in the case of an emergency.

Al Baath in Damascus has attacked what it calls an attempt to strike a balance of power between "one hundred million Arabs and a gang of Zionist outlaws who usurped part of our sacred land". Doubtless King Faisal would hope to be reassured on this point — especially as, for Britain, Suez is now only the place where its defence policy is east of, a distinction soon to be taken over by Aden. Some Saudi officials believe that the Soviet Union may wish to stage a limited confrontation in Arabia as a bargaining counter in the international power struggle and they are therefore anxious to secure their position.

They have derived some satisfaction from the remarks of Mr. Ahmed Shukairy, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, whose threat to send elements of his Army to fight with the Vietcong is thought unlikely to improve Cairo's relations with Washington or make Mr. Johnson forget the Middle East.

The State Department's insistence that the United Nations relief and works agency should not feed the Palestine Army has been greeted with universal ire in the Arab press, although at least one newspaper seemed to blame primarily the Kennedy brothers, who, it said, were Zionists trying to gain the White House by liquidating the Palestine problem. Mr. Shukairy himself is quoted as saying: "If the United States deprives us of food, we should then know how to retaliate in the Arab east."

King Husain, of Jordan, meanwhile, has declared that all hope for cooperation between him and the Palestine Liberation Organization at present constituted, has gone because the organization has fallen into the hands of those trying to use it to blow up Arab unity. He said Marxism was trying to infiltrate and there were many opportunities for communism to exploit in the Arab world.

"We are not so naive as to allow ourselves to be exploited and to believe that the Soviet Union and communist China are the only two allies sincerely wanting to help to end the Palestine question in our interest", he said.

Seventy French Jewish Communities Exist Where There Were None Five Years Ago

During the twenty years since the end of World War II, the French Jewish community has risen from a population of 150,000 to more than 500,000, and has become the fourth largest Jewish community in the world. The make-up of this community has changed from one predominately Ashkenazi (East European) to at least fifty per cent Sephardic (Spanish and Portuguese) as a result of the influx of Jewish emigrants from North Africa. This shift has had a dramatic effect in the Jewish identity of the community, which has become more aware of Judaism and Jewish tradition than at any time in recent history, says a report on French Jewry, with special emphasis on the impact of North African immigration, prepared by the Paris Office of the American Jewish Committee.

The Paris office is headquarters for the Community Service Program, which was established in Europe in 1958 by the A.J.C.; the Alliance Israelite Universelle; and the Anglo-Jewish Association; to spur a waning sense of Jewish identity among Europe's surviving Jews. During the past seven years Community Service books, traveling exhibitions, tapes, and films, and many aspects of Judaism have served as the basis for nearly 4,000 community events in Western Europe.

The report states that North African Jews who have come to France are integrating well into the general life of that country because they speak French and have been educated in French schools; many have had business ties with metropolitan France; a large number are well-educated and come from the upper-socio-economic levels.

The general official and public attitude toward the newcomers has been one of understanding, marked by efforts to help all of them. The report adds: "In the general French community, such grumbling as was heard when newcomers started competing for jobs and housing was directed against all 'les pieds noirs' (the black feet), the French popular term for North African colonists."

Turning to the general attitude of the French community toward its Jewish citizens, the report asserts that the French press, literature, and theatre have all reflected a largely positive interest in the Jew. It continues:

"The most prestige-laden of the French literary prizes, the Goncourt, has on three occasions gone to Jewish authors writing on Jewish subjects. Almost any book on Israel chalks up excellent sales. Events such as the Eichmann Trial; the production of Rolf Hochhuth's play The Deputy; the Ecumenical Council's Declaration on the Jews, all make for renewed resonance."

This interest is also expressed in small, everyday ways. Leading newspapers such as Le Monde and Le Figaro, treat Jewish community news as general news, standard practice in the United States but new in France. For example, the last annual meeting of the Fonds Social Juif Unifié was used as the basis for a newspaper article on French Jewry as well as feature stories on Jewish high holidays and other related subjects.

The report points out that in the past native French Jewry has tended toward assimilation. The pervasiveness and appeal of French culture, emphasized by the national homogeneity of the French educational system, often went hand in hand with a loss of Jewish knowledge and the withdrawal from Jewish tradition. However, the new infusion of more Jewish-conscious Jews has caused the French Jewish community structure to improve, Jewish voluntary agencies have grown, and the Jewish communities, which were mainly centered in Paris and Alsace-Lorraine, have spread throughout France.

The report states: "Physically, therefore, French Judaism is more present, more visible, than ever before, in terms of numbers and structure. When Community Service drew up its Guide To France in 1961, it listed eighty cities and towns with some Jewish community structure. In the same area today there are more than 130 Jewish communities. If one were to include the Paris suburbs, then there now exist about seventy Jewish communities that did not exist five or six years ago."

Presently, according to the report, there is about one rabbi for every 5,000 Jews in France, but rabbis are quite unequally distributed. Another fifty or so are required, it is estimated by the Central Consistory.

The report concludes: "French Judaism is unique in being the only Diaspora (Dispersion) community in which Ashkenazi and Sephardic cultures are now melded on relatively equal terms. However, it still has to prove that it can develop a viable Jewish culture and tradition of its own, one that will assure meaningful Jewish continuity. The goal of its leadership is building poles of Jewish attraction that can hold their rising generations. Whether they will succeed is very much an open question."

Founded in 1966, the American Jewish Committee is the pioneer human relations agency in the U.S. combating bigotry, protecting the civil and religious rights of Jews, and advancing the cause of human rights for all.

Rabbi Interests Pope In Top-Level Inter-Faith Meeting

Pope Paul VI was reported to have received with great interest a proposal presented by an American rabbi for a conference of world religious leaders of all faiths.

The rabbi, Dr. Abraham M. Hershberg, president of the Union of Rabbis of Latin America, and vice president of the similar body for the United States and Canada, has just spent two months consulting religious leaders in Europe and the Middle East.

He was received for forty-five minutes by Pope Paul to present his idea for a top-level interfaith meeting as a potentially powerful instrument for world peace, says the New York Times. He also described the limitations he found on religious freedom, particularly for Jews, in the Soviet Union.

Speaking to reporters, Rabbi Hershberg said the Pope had expressed interest in the conference idea and had promised to consider it seriously. He would certainly be represented, he said, if the meeting was held at other than top-level.

The rabbi reported similar expressions of interest, without formal commitment, from Dr. Arthur M. Ramsey, Archbishop of Canterbury; the Ecumenical Patriarch, Athenagoras I, senior Eastern Orthodox prelate; the Chief Rabbi of Israel, Rachmin Nissim; and Orthodox and Jewish leaders in the Soviet Union.

"The purpose of the summit meeting would be to publicize the cause of religious freedom and international goodwill, religion to religion," Rabbi Hershberg said. "When diplomacy fails, perhaps religion can help in the cause of peace."

JEWISH AMATEUR POLITICIAN IS DEMOCRATIC NOMINEE FOR GOVERNOR OF PA.; JUST LIKE THAT

An amateur who could not get the professionals to listen has become the Democratic nominee for Governor of Pennsylvania: Milton Shapp, a 53-year-old Philadelphia industrialist, freely spent his self-made fortune and managed to get the attention of about 50,000 more voters in primary, says Joseph A. Loftus, in the New York Times, than his organization-picked opponent, Robert P. Casey, a Scranton lawyer and state Senator.

The Republican organization, on the other hand, maintained close order discipline. It nominated all its state-wide candidates and beat back four threats from the right wing, two of them in Congressional races.

The Republican nominee for Governor is Raymond P. Shafer, who was elected lieutenant governor four years ago on the ticket with Gov. William W. Scranton.

The Republicans had expected Senator Casey to be the man to beat in November and now must reorient their strategy to go after an industrialist who says the state can provide a college education free to every qualified student without raising tax rates.

Mr. Shapp is distinctive on several grounds. He is believed to be the first Jew to run for Governor of Pennsylvania on a major party ticket. He has a collection of 15 awards, including organized labor's Good Citizenship Award of 1963. Unions representing his employes endorsed his candidacy. He says he suggested the idea of the Peace Corps to President Kennedy.

Since this is the second time in a row that Democratic organization leaders have lost their candidate in the primary, some changes are likely to be made.

Two years ago, the party leaders recommended Justice Michael A. Musmanno of the State Supreme Court for Senator. Mr. Shapp had announced his candidacy but withdrew. Miss Genevieve Blatt did run, however. In fact, she outran Justice Musmanno in a close race, but then lost to the Republican candidate, Senator Hugh Scott.

Mr. Shapp has made it clear that he wants his own man in as Democratic state chairman. The term of the current chairman, John S. Rice, ends June 1, and Mr. Shapp said he expected Mr. Rice to recognize the date, says the New York Times. Mr. Rice is a former Ambassador to the Netherlands.

The weakness of the organization in the cities was Mr. Shapp's strength. Francis R. Smith, Philadelphia chairman, had forecast a 75,000-vote margin for Mr. Casey. He produced a 7,000-vote margin, whereupon he and Mayor James H. J. Tate, also a Democrat, resumed their public brawling, blaming each other for the outcome.

Mr. Shapp had expected to lose Allegheny County (Pittsburgh) by 20,000 to 25,000 votes. He lost it by only 2,000.

His statewide margin exceeds 36,000, but he said he expected the remaining unreported precincts and the votes of servicemen and other absentees would raise that to 50,000.

Mr. Shapp started out alone. Along the way he was joined by James R. Kelley, of Western Pennsylvania, as candidate for lieutenant governor. Mr. Shapp was unable to carry Mr. Kelley with him. The winner was State Senator Leonard Staisey, Mr. Casey's running mate.

During the campaign, Mr. Shapp opened 62 headquarters offices and operated without an overall manager.

His spending for a saturation campaign on television, radio, newspapers, and pamphlets is estimated to range from $800,000 to $2-million. Aides say the latter figure is absurdly high and Mr. Shapp says he will report the accurate figure in due time.

Mr. Shapp is the founder and chairman of the Jerrold Electronics Corporation. (Jerrold is his middle name, which he dropped for the campaign.) With $500 and two employes he started a company whose net worth is now about $10-million.

He employs 2,000 in Philadelphia, Plainview, L. I., and Sherbourne, N. Y. He makes television cable and Harman Kardon high fidelity equipment, says the New York Times. He has vigorously fought the merger of the Pennsylvania and New York Central railroads, and says he will personally carry that fight to the United States Supreme Court if the Commonwealth does not.
